EVOLUTION OF ORIENTATION ON THE POVERTY REDUCTION POLICY

- In the past, there was no or relatively few policies targeted directly for the “poor”.
- The Strategy was to deliver a broad economic growth policy, combined with the development of rural infrastructures.
- While such approach had been quite successful in reducing poverty, many among the poor had been excluded from the development outcomes.
- The economic crisis showed how the lack of a social safety net and social protection left the poor exposed to economic shocks.

EVOLUTION OF ORIENTATION ON THE POVERTY REDUCTION POLICY

- The Government's approach towards policy alleviation has shifted from general economic development policies to more targeted policies
- Democracy and openness have brought the poverty issue from a merely limited, academic discourse to a significant political issue
- More targeted programs and efforts to build social insurance have been developed after the crisis

EVOLUTION OF POVERTY AND SOCIAL PROTECTION PROGRAM

- Before the Crisis:
  - ➔ Most efforts were mainly non-targeted (general price subsidies)
  - ➔ Rural development (such as BIMAS, KUK, massive school and health facilities development), which later became region-targeted (IDT)
- During the Crisis:
  - ➔ Targeted but reactive measures under safety net umbrella (cash for work, rice for the poor, health for the poor and scholarships), all designed to secure the consumption level of the poor
